AIR RAIDS AND CATALOGS

The establishment of the Office of Civilian Defense and Mayor La Guardia's campaign to arouse the dormant American spirit to self-protection turned the interest of both the private residents and the guardians of public properties to the hypothetical attacks by enemy countries and to the problem of air-raid defense. The Federal Government owns many buildings in Washington, and has in them not only long files of important documents but also treasures of art and irreplaceable products of scientific research. Even though we are confident that air-raids across the Atlantic or the Pacific are almost impossible and any enemy bomber would be discovered and destroyed long before it could reach our shores, it still remains a wise policy to prepare ourselves for any eventuality, and to pour lots of water over our roofs in the present world conflagration.

During the last year, many conferences have been held in Washington on which the representatives of the government institutions, archives, museums and libraries discussed the measures to be taken for the protection of important historical documents, paintings, museum specimens, books, etc. Most of these measures have been learned from the British authorities, and, though their protective value has been scarcely tested by experiments, they seem to be effective. Such measures are the protection of the buildings by sand bags, that of the roofs by special contraptions, that of the treasures by evacuation, and so on.

Air-raids, as far as the experience of the British medical libraries shows, are not to be feared of, especially if the library is located at the outskirts of the large city. The chance of a direct hit by an incendiary bomb is very small, and no medical library thus far has been damaged in Great Britain. There have been slight injuries to the library buildings themselves, especially to the windows, and books have been scattered off the shelves by the negative pulling wave of bomb explosions.

The Army Medical Library has also studied the means of air-raid defense and has taken count of its valuables. The problem is very complicated and decidedly different from that found in any other public library. Our book collection itself is the fundament of the Index-Catalogue, and the destruction of even a small portion of the collection would greatly damage the present usefulness of the Index-Catalogue, which is not only an ordinary bibliography but a catalog of actual holdings, thus saving time in searching for the location of the listed publications. For this reason it is necessary to protect the collection in its entirety.

Protection is to be extended also to our catalogs. We have several catalog files in the Library; there is the Main Alphabetical Catalog, then the unprinted card file of the Index-Catalogue containing about 1,500,000 cards for subjects and approximately 70,000 cards for authors; there is also a Portrait Catalog, which shows the holdings of four other medical libraries. The unprinted manuscript Index-Catalogue is the most valuable of all. It represents the work of more than fifteen years. Each year an average of 80,000 cards are printed in the annual volumes of the growing series of the Index-Catalogue, but the yearly increase by indexing the current periodicals is about the same as the yearly decrease by printing. Thus, although the content of the unprinted Index-Catalogue changes completely every fifteen years --- so much time being necessary to publish a full alphabet of the catalog --- the total number of unprinted cards in the file remains the same; approximately a million and a half.

A little calculating will show the dollar value of this manuscript Index-Catalogue. The actual price of so many cards is probably not more than $16,000, but the cost of cataloging and indexing amounts to $16,000 yearly so that the total dollar value of the subject-author file as it stands now is approximately $256,000. Yet if any natural or unnatural force should cause the destruction of this catalog, the damage would be greater than a quarter of a million dollars, because the catalog could not be duplicated by any available means.

For these reasons, The Librarian considers that microfilming of the subject- and author- cards of our library would be the best temporary protection against any damage, the best defense of the Index-Catalogue and of the interests of medical research. Microfilming of the card catalog would cost about $5,000 but unless a special fund is provided by some of our science-promoting foundations, the librarian will have to keep on thinking and speculating as to whether he should ship the card catalog to his remote ranch in Texas or should rent an abandoned mine for the safe-keeping of the Index-Catalogue.
